KWOA Turns Twenty!

Join KWOA as it celebrates its 20TH anniversary at Pine Mountain State Park March 31 – April 1.

And now a little history...

On February 12, 1994 an organizational meeting launched KWOA in Bardstown. Keith Argow was the keynote speaker.

The first KWOA newsletter was issued in 1994 to announce the inaugural meeting. Don Girton, retired U.S. Forest Service and one of KWOA's founders, was the first editor for the newsletter and continued in that role until Karen Marshall assumed the position in 2006.

The 1994 issue noted that timberlands available for wood production cover 48% of Kentucky's land area (unchanged today) and that the state ranked third among all states in annual hardwood production. Wood industries accounted for nine percent of the state's employment (compared to 2.7% today). Wood industries ranked fourth in employment.

The 1994 issue discussed a recent meeting of wood industry, university and governmental agency representatives to discuss expanding the economic strengths of the wood industry.

The top five barriers to bringing the Kentucky forest industry up to its potential:

1. Need for increased forest management;
2. Additional education, training, and technical assistance;
3. Modification of current workman's compensation;
4. Marketing assistance; and
5. Capital availability/financial assistance.

Girton noted the arrival of "ecosystem" perspectives in forest management. He noted the 1993 release by the Society of American Foresters report Sustaining Long-term Forest Health and Productivity.

Girton summarized the major forest issues of concern from a list of 40 identified by a meeting of a wide spectrum of interests in December 1993:

- Leadership
- Sustainable development
- Public awareness

As KWOA begins its 21st year it is worth taking stock of Don's synopsis of Kentucky's forests, challenges and priorities in 1994 and our progress and current course.

Kentucky Forestry Economic Impact Grows in 2013

UK Forestry Extension in cooperation with UK Agricultural Economics released the latest Kentucky forestry economic impact estimates recently. Dr. Jeff Stringer, UK Forestry Extension professor made the announcement at the Kentucky Farm Bureau Annual Meeting; he reported that the estimated total economic impact of the Kentucky Forestry Sector exceeded $12 billion in 2013 and the outlook for 2014 is positive. Meet Kristian Elswick, recipient of the KWOA 2013 Forestry Student Scholarship

KWOA is pleased to award its 2013 Forestry Student Scholarship to Kristian Elswick, a junior forestry major at the University of Kentucky. The purpose of the scholarship is to provide an award to an outstanding student enrolled in the University of Kentucky's professional forestry degree program. Awards are granted on the basis of leadership potential, connection with the forestry community and insight for the forestry profession. The scholarship is in the amount of $600 paid directly to UK for tuition fees.

Ms. Elswick is a graduate of Montgomery County High School. After earning an Associate of Arts degree from Bluegrass Community and Technical College she felt like something was missing. A backpacking trip in Alaska helped her discover what she wanted to do with her career and her life. She enrolled at UK and began her major as a forestry student.

Kristian is very involved with the Society of American Foresters student chapter and was its sophomore representative last year. She volunteers with Reforest the Bluegrass. Through the forestry program and the U.S. Forest Service Kristian has completed her training for Firefighter Type 2 wild land fire-fighting. Through this training and experience, she is involved in the Fire Cats program at UK. She has worked recreation development for the U.S. Forest Service for the past two summers in which her responsibilities included maintaining and managing developed areas in the Red River Gorge Geological Area.

Kristian will be joining us at our 2014 annual meeting where we hope many of you will take the opportunity to introduce yourselves and get to know the latest recipient of our forestry student scholarship.

A letter of reference from one of Kristian's professors commented "...Kristian has a desire to learn. She is curious about the world around her and is trying to get as much out of her education as she can. Kristian sees her courses as something she wants to do. As a professor, I find few things as gratifying as this kind of enthusiasm from a student."

KWOA representative Doug McLaren presented Kristian Elswick with the 2013 Forestry Student Scholarship.

Kristian Elswick Thanks KWOA for Scholarship

Dear Kentucky Woodland Owners Association,

I am writing to express my sincere gratitude to you for making the Kentucky Woodland Owners Scholarship possible. I was thrilled to learn of my selection for this honor and I am deeply appreciative of your support. As a junior attending Spring field semester, the financial assistance you provided will be of great help to me in paying my educational expenses. By awarding me the Kentucky Woodland Owners Scholarship, you have lightened my financial burden, which allows me to focus more on the most important aspect of school, learning. Thank you again for your generosity and support.

Sincerely
Kristian Elswick

Greg Kuhns: Private Landowners Key To Stronger Forest Industry

This article was first published in the December 28, 2013 Lexington Herald-Leader. Re-printed with permission.

Are wood products and forests Eastern Kentucky's economic salvation? The answer is both yes and no.

As a forest landowner and former resident of Harlan County, I would love to say that forests are the magic bullet.

As our country slowly recovers from its recent economic tragedy, we should appreciate the role that sustainable forests and the wood industry already play in Kentucky's economy and job growth.

According to a University of Kentucky study, the total economic impact of the forest industry in 2012 was $9.92 billion, with direct revenue from the forestry sector of $6.37 billion. This sector was responsible for total employment of 51,928 or 2.7 percent of Kentucky's jobs and $1.25 billion in earned income. This is during a soft economic recovery with slow housing starts.

Kentucky is blessed with abundant hardwood forests and ranks as the leading producer of hardwoods in the South. About 75 percent of these forests are owned by private landowners. About half of Kentucky's forests lie in Eastern Kentucky. However, as is typical throughout Kentucky, management of these forest lands is woefully short of producing desirable, high-value hardwood.

To produce high-quality lumber, veneer and staves for the cooperage industry, forests need to be managed or tended like a garden. While the growth and number of trees in Kentucky have increased, the quality of timber has decreased.

Many forests have been "high graded" — that is logging in the past has taken the biggest and best and left the rest. This has resulted in low-quality forests with damaged, deformed or less valuable trees. High-quality trees are important to develop and attract a forest industry and make it profitable.

How can Kentucky, especially the mountains, attract, support and sustain a viable forest industry? It begins with the private landowner growing quality trees and practicing economically sustainable forestry.

Out of 168,000 landowners in Kentucky, a small number (about 800) have developed management plans that will sustain their woodlands and increase their economic benefit.

These plans (U.S. Department of Agriculture Forest Stewardship Program and American Tree Farm System) include best practices that address tree planting, repressing destructive invasive species, fire trails, sustainable and ecosensitive harvesting, water quality enhancement and protection, wildlife habitat improvement and opportunities for recreation.

KWOA Director Dr. Greg Kuhns is a pathologist who also helped manage a family farm in Bullitt County that won awards for forest management and wildlife conservation.

Money is available on a cost-share basis through the local USDA Natural Resources Conservation Service to implement some of these practices. The Kentucky Woodland Owners Association (<http://www.kwoa.net>) is another valuable resource for landowners. The Kentucky Division of Forestry has suffered severe personnel impacts because of state budget cuts.

These incredibly valuable experts are critical to enhance and foster viable sustainable forests, forest management and the forest industry. A ray of sunshine, despite the economic stress, the state is restoring the tornado-devastated tree seedling nursery in West Liberty.

Can economical sustainable forestry and forestry practices significantly impact Eastern Kentucky's economy?

An unqualified yes.

Dr. Greg Kuhns is a pathologist who also helped manage a family farm in Bullitt County that won awards for forest management and wildlife conservation.
